HUMAN 3308. Medieval Women.
The purpose of this course is to examine some key literary works to see how, and perhaps why, attitudes toward women evolved as they did, and how women responded to those beliefs in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance. Consideration will be given to traditional works not primarily about women to examine how the treatment of women in such texts mirrored and effected attitudes about women as exhibited in philosophy and art. In comparison the course will also examine books written by women to understand women’s reactions and resistance to traditional attitudes and images. Class can be cross listed with Women’s Studies.

This course will examine how Jewish women handled the hardships inflicted upon them by the rise of Nazism, during the Holocaust, and after the war ended. We will examine the choices they made, how those choices affected them, why they made the decisions they did, and how their determination sustained them. This will be done through a combination of books, film, and art. Finally, we will explore the rationale behind womenâ€™s choices and how they differed from the choices men made during the same period.
